EMERGENCY SUPPLIES TO PACK IN A 72-HOUR "GO BAG"

With the frequency and severity of natural disasters increasing every year, emergency preparedness is more important than ever. In an emergency, the federal government's readiness website ready.gov recommends being prepared with a disaster kit (also called a "go bag" or "bug-out bag"). The kit should contain enough food, water and emergency supplies to survive for at least 72 hours after a disaster.

HURRICANE PREPAREDNESS KIT

In hurricane-prone regions, an emergency kit is vital. You may have to evacuate several days in advance and be stuck in traffic. Or, after the hurricane passes, it could be days or weeks before you can return home.

So create two plans: one for evacuation, the other for sheltering in place. Print and laminate each, if you can.

There's a chance you'll be evacuating or sheltering for a long time, depending upon regional damage. Plan to include rain gear (raincoat or poncho, waterproof boots), extra changes of clothing and waterproof matches or lighters. Also, seal your important documents — including cash — in a waterproof plastic bag. Additional hurricane kit items can include water purification tablets, towels, duct tape, scissors and work gloves. Once an impending hurricane is announced, people often panic, making it difficult to gain access to even the most basic supplies.

72-HOUR KIT TIPS

Store your emergency kit supplies in duffel bags, rolling bins (including coolers or suitcases) or other easy-to-grab containers. Watertight is best.

Be sure household members will be able to lift any emergency containers. The idea is to "grab and go" with the most essentials you can carry, in case evacuation is necessary.

Keep your kit in a dry area of your home. Refresh the contents every year. Make sure foods aren't expired, clothing still fits and medications haven't reached their expiration dates. Routinely refill and replace medication and food as needed.

According to the nonprofit MyGoodDeed, the purpose of the September 11 National Day of Service and Remembrance is to transform the anniversary of 9/11 from a day of tragedy into a day of doing good. "We wanted to make sure the terrorists didn't have the last word in forever defining for generations to how America would remember and observe 9/11," said 9/11 Day and MyGoodDeed co-founder David Paine. "We wanted instead to honor the victims and those who rose in service by keeping alive the spirit of unity and service that arose in the immediate aftermath of the September 11 attacks."
